

Why do we sell out of food? and other BBQ questions

- Q. "How come you're out of _____?"
- A. The simple answer is that we would rather sell out than have food left over at the end of the night. Barbecue (as with most food) is best served when it is prepared and served fresh. Therefore, we estimate what we'll serve today, and when it's gone, it's gone!
- Q. "Why don't you make more if you see you're running out?"
- A. The barbecue we are serving was placed in the barbecue pit much earlier in the day. We cook at low temperature over smoke for upwards of 16 hours. It is this low and slow cooking style that gives our food its signature taste. Therefore, we can't cook more when we see we're running out. We refuse to compromise the quality of our food by partially cooking in advance or reheating on the grill.
- Q. "Why isn't my food hot?"
- A. True barbecue is never cooked over high heat; therefore, it never gets "hot." Our barbecue is served at the temperature that it comes out of the smoker.
- Q. "Why is my food pink?"
- A. Don't worry. Your food is fully cooked. Barbecuing over wood smoke imparts a pink tint to chicken, beef and pork especially around the bone, and a noticeable "smoke ring" along the edge of the meat.

Our History

After spending over a decade visiting, judging, and competing in barbecue contests all over the country, Earl finally set out to realize his dream. In the year 2000, he found that he had developed a following in regard to feeding his friends and family. Soon Earl started a successful catering business and now has brought Porky's BBQ into a reality. All he could think of was a cozy place with old wooden walls, picnic tables, lots of different artifacts, an interior look of aged brick, and folks enjoying some of the best barbecue around.

Porky's meats are SLOW COOKED over hickory wood. As Earl says, "We're not jokin' ... We're smokin'!" Each slab of ribs is trimmed to his tight specifications, and every pork shoulder is hand pulled and smoked up to 16 hours. There is NO boiled or baked meat here! So pull up a chair, roll up your sleeves, and dig into the best BBQ you have ever experienced.

Porky's BBQ specialties include hickory-smoked pork, beef, chicken, and barbecued ribs. The ribs are cooked long and slow in hickory-fired pits and smothered in Porky's own tangy barbecue sauce, or sprinkled with a dry rub of herbs, spices, and peppers. Porky's BBQ Restaurant combines traditional southern-style barbecue with exclusive ingredients and preparation techniques that give Porky's meaty, tender ribs a flavor all their own. Gigantic-size pork, beef, and chicken sandwiches offer other alternatives. All dinners are served with PLENTY of meat and a choice of sides such as piping hot BBQ baked beans, dirty rice, and crispy fresh cole slaw.
